INTRODUCTION

In January 1986 a group of nine Arkansas teachers met for a week in Little Rock as part of a federally funded project sponsored by the Arkansas Department of Education, the Department of Arkansas Heritage and the Arkansas Sesquicentennial Commission's Education Task Force.

The committee met in conjunction with two other committees: one created the fifth grade course content guide for Arkansas history; the other created 89 lesson plans and 95 classroom activities on Arkansas studies for elementary and secondary grades.

The committee that compiled this handbook spent the first two days together contemplating the concept of what kind of materials a) would be the most helpful to classroom teachers of Arkansas studies, grades K-12, and b) could be compiled by the teachers in the remaining days.

The consensus of the committee was to develop a handbook of resources for current teachers of Arkansas studies -- a compilation of sources of information on Arkansas. The goal was to produce a guide that would be general enough to stay fairly current for several years, while remaining specific enough to save time in locating assistance.

Several factors affected the scope of the book. The celebration of the state's Sesquicentennial in 1986 has fostered many publications about Arkansas. Many of these will be issued after this handbook goes to press. In trying to keep the book as timeless as possible, the emphasis on a complete recommended bibliography of specific books and instructional materials was lessened. The initial chapter was developed as a guide to materials that can generally be found in school and/or local libraries to supplement instruction and as a complement to the units and activities developed by the sister committee.

The teachers who compiled this handbook were selected from recommendations sent by the teachers' respective principals. After working with the committee, it was easy to see why they had been nominated. They are representative of the dedicated, tireless teachers of Arkansas history who have worked on their own for decades, creating original teaching units and classroom materials. They have given to the students lucky enough to have them as teachers an understanding of their state's history and thus an appreciation of their own place in its making.

To those Arkansas history teachers of years past, present and future, this handbook is dedicated.

I. BOOKS ABOUT ARKANSAS

This list has been divided into three sections: a) general books about Arkansas, which are needed for use in all school libraries; b) supplementary books, which deal with a specific area or era; and c) bibliographies and indices which list references for specific areas of study. This list is not meant to be comprehensive and is intended to serve only as an introduction and guide to Arkansas materials. Most of these books are generally available in school and/or local libraries or through interlibrary loan. Addresses for many of the publishers can be found in Section II., SOURCES OF INSTRUCTIONAL MATERIALS, of this handbook.

X. LIBRARIES AND ARCHIVES

Historical resources can be divided into primary and secondary sources. Primary sources are first-hand records, such as letters, diaries, photographs, etc. They are usually more accurate than secondary sources, but they may be more difficult to evaluate. Secondary sources are usually in a more finished form, but they may reflect the authors' biases.

Libraries can be excellent sources of both primary and secondary sources. Your local school, public and college libraries are the best place to begin research on a subject.

Included here are lists of some of the state's libraries. Public libraries having larger Arkansas collections are noted with asterisks. Special libraries listed have information on Arkansas. College and university libraries listed have large Arkansas collections and/or archives. The lists are alphabetized by city.

XIII. ARKANSAS LOCAL RESOURCES

In this section of the handbook, no attempt is made to list individually the wealth of local resources available to the teacher of Arkansas history, government or economics. Rather, it lists some types of resources which might be available and the ways in which these resources can be utilized.

A. GOVERNMENT OFFICES

1. City offices

Types of government offices will vary with the type of city or town government. Generally, these offices might have current information on population, income, growth patterns and duties of various government officials. Old city records might reveal unusual laws, birth and death records of famous citizens, minutes of city meetings, etc.

2. County offices

a. County Clerk

The County Clerk's office is the repository of records such as marriage records, wills, land records, etc. Marriage records might provide a look at famous or early settlers of your area. Wills provide a look at types of property people of a particular era owned. Land records can provide the history of a particular spot in your area or a picture of immigration and migration in the area.

b. Circuit Clerk

Sometimes land records are located in the Circuit Clerk's office. Also, here you will find records of probates and court cases. If you have had a famous trial in your area, students might enjoy studying legal documents of the trial.

c. County Judge/Quorum Court

These two government agencies can provide current information about your county government and, if they still exist, records of past history of county government decisions. Also, ask your county judge about Ihis Is Arkansas which highlights the history and government of each of Arkansas' 75 counties. It is published yearly by the County Judges Association.

B. CIVIC ORGANIZATIONS

Many civic organizations publish materials about your local area. Check with such organizations as the Rotary Club, Kiwanis, Daughters of American Revolution, United Daughters of the Confederacy, Colonial Dames, Sons of the American Revolution, historical and genealogical societies, restoration/preservation groups, Junior League and League of Women Voters, etc. These organizations are a possible source of guest speakers as well.

C. PROFESSIONAL ORGANIZATIONS

Professional organizations, such as the local Medical Association, Bar Association, etc., can often offer guest speakers or printed materials. For example, students find it interesting to hear of the history of medicine in their community or the laws of Arkansas.

D. CHURCHES AND RELIGIOUS ORGANIZATIONS

Local churches often have histories of their churches which will list facts or stories of early area settlers, or the church building itself may be one of historic interest to the community.

E. ETHNIC GROUPS

Local ethnic groups often hold celebrations or have guest speakers which will instruct your students in customs of their ethnic groups, reasons which brought the ethnic group to your community and the history of the group in your area.

F. BUSINESSES AND INDUSTRIES

These groups often have information for studying the current history of your community. If the business has been there a long time, they may have old photographs of the business which help your students to picture the "way it was." Sometimes they also have advertising materials, such as maps, etc., which could be used as instructional materials.

G. CEMETERIES AND FUNERAL HOMES

Cemeteries offer several types of teaching aids. Having students make rubbings of the oldest tombstones they can find can help them to identify with the early history of the community and can teach valuable lessons in early art forms. Cemeteries can also provide discoveries of epidemics of diseases, early settlers, famous citizens and birth and death records. Funeral home records can reveal much of the same information and often can allow a comparison of the value of money yesterday and today in terms of funeral costs.

H. LOCAL RESOURCE PEOPLE

Local resource people may come from a variety of sources. Government officials can speak about local government. Professional groups may provide speakers on the local history of their profession. Local genealogical or historical societies often have members who know a great deal about the history of your area. Do not overlook the older members of your community. An oral history project can be beneficial to both students and older citizens of the community. Visiting a local historic district in your area can often add to your knowledge of the buildings and their history.

I. LOCAL MILITARY GUARD UNITS

These groups sometimes publish materials about the history of their units or even the area. Some of the older members have had prior military service and can speak about their experiences in such events as the Vietnam or Korean Conflicts. They may also know former members who could speak about earlier wars.

J. LOCAL ART CENTERS

At times, art centers may have exhibits of early photographs of an area or historic paintings.

K. LOCAL HISTORIC DISTRICTS

These organizations may have historic buildings for which they can arrange tours or furnish programs or speakers.

L. CHAMBERS OF COMMERCE

Never overlook this valuable resource. Chambers of Commerce have current statistics about your community, often have materials which can be used for instructional purposes and can recommend resource people.

M. LOCAL MEDIA

Your local television station may have videotapes of programs which might be of use to you in your classroom. Radio stations sometimes have tapes of special, historic spots they run in connection with special events in your community. Local newspapers often maintain "morgues" or files of their back issues which can be a valuable source of up-to-the-minute news of a particular time period.

XIV. ASSOCIATIONS AND BUSINESSES

Local, state, regional and national associations can offer a wealth of information on their particular subjects. For information on statewide and regional associations, consult the Directory of Arkansas Associations published by the Reference Department of Mullins Library, University of Arkansas, Fayetteville, Arkansas 72701. The 1985 edition (published in January 1986) is available for $9.50 ($6.50 to libraries and associations listed). The Directory features the name, address, president or executive director, telephone number, number of members, founding date, publications, conventions, affiliations with other organizations and description of purpose of 390 associations in Arkansas.

You should also contact local organizations in your area for resources they may offer.

For information on businesses, you may consult the annual Directory of Arkansas Manufacturers for names of companies which may offer materials for schools. It is available for $30 from the Arkansas Industrial Development Foundation, P. O. Box 1784, Little Rock, Arkansas 72203. Some businesses periodically offer information free of charge to teachers.

XV. COMPETITIONS AND AWARDS

Various organizations in Arkansas offer competitions and awards for history projects and especially for historical essays. Some competitions are for adults, but could be useful for some secondary programs as well as for gifted and talented programs.

A. HISTORY DAY

History Day is an annual event for the junior and senior high school levels. Students participate in district competitions in six categories: papers, individual projects, group projects, individual performances, group performances and media presentations. Certificates and ribbons are presented to all entrants.

Arkansas is divided into 12 districts for the competition. A district coordinator is responsible for contacting all social studies teachers in his/her district on both the junior and senior high levels. Lists of teachers are provided by the Arkansas Department of Education. Entry forms, rule books, judging forms, certificates, seals, etc., are distributed to teachers by district coordinators.

First, second and third place winners in each category on both the junior and senior high levels are qualified to participate in the state competition, usually held on the last Saturday in April at the State Capitol Building. Cash awards are given to winners by the Arkansas Historical Association and the Arkansas Gazette. Certificates and seals are awarded to each participant. Olympic-style medals are awarded in each category (both junior and senior) for first, second and third place winners. First and second place winners represent Arkansas in their category at the National History Day at College Park, Maryland, in June. Cash awards of $1,000, $500 and $250 are awarded national winners, in addition to certificates, medals and scholarship offers.

B. ARKANSAS HISTORICAL ASSOCIATION

The AHA offers annual awards for historical essays. There are cash prizes for essays on statewide history subjects, local history subjects, as well as other awards based upon county and local historical society journal entries.

Contact: Arkansas Historical Association

C. WOMEN'S HISTORY INSTITUTE

A cash award of $1,000 is awarded annually for the winning original essay on Arkansas women's history.

Contact: Department of History
University of Arkansas at Little Rock
Phone: 569-3235

D. ASSOCIATION OF ARKANSAS COUNTIES

The Association of Arkansas Counties has initiated a scholarship program worth up to $1,000 for students majoring in government or a related field. The scholarship is awarded based on financial need and academic performance and is open to current students, those entering college as well as postgraduate students. Priority consideration will be given to descendants of current or retired county employees.

Contact: Association of Arkansas Counties

E. LOCAL HISTORICAL SOCIETIES

Some local and county historical societies have annual competitions. For example, the Pulaski County Historical Society gives a cash award for the best article on Pulaski County. Contact your local society for further information.

XVI. COLLEGES AND UNIVERSITIES

Colleges and universities often offer support for the teaching of Arkansas studies through courses, special collections or special services. The particular type of support offered at each college is listed with that institution.

A. State Institutions

1. ARKANSAS STATE UNIVERSITY, Jonesboro, AR 72467 (Phone: 972-2100)
